To analyse the relationship between the position of the tongue during a position transition (FT), to the position of the onset of the first laryngeal event, it is necessary to know the biomechanical properties of the body part responsible for the movement. The aim of the present study was to investigate the relationship between the tongue and the head during the first half of the FT in speech. This relationship was assessed in a set of ten sentences spoken by ten subjects. The movement of the head was first synchronized with the sound signal using a video camera. Synchronized video and audio signal were fed into a digital audio workstation where the signal was processed into frames every 30 ms. The frame with the onset of the head movement was then analysed for the position of the tongue, using a video-based method. Statistical analysis revealed a strong association between the position of the tongue and the position of the head at the onset of the FT. The position of the tongue is strongly related to the position of the head during a short period of time (approximately 60 ms from the onset of the FT). This implies that the position of the tongue may play a role in determining the timing and structure of the pattern of laryngeal events. The analysis reported here may provide a valuable basis for the development of more systematic models of speech production and/

Q: I need to solve the following Max Function with constraints I have been trying to find a way to solve the following optimization problem from Wolfram Alpha: It states the solution, but I just have no idea how to express it using math. Can anyone help, or at least explain why their solution has those constraints. A: The first problem reduces to solving $3x+y-1=0$, for which there are many solutions: $$x,y,z=\left(-1,\frac{1}{3},\frac{3}{5}\right)$$ The second problem is equivalent to solving $$x^2+y^2+z^2+4x-2y=0$$ $$x^2+y^2=\frac{2}{7}$$ The solutions to $x^2+y^2=\frac{2}{7}$ are $\pm \frac{\sqrt{7}}{7}$. Not only does seeing wildlife mean you can up your Instagram engagement, but it also means more people are getting outside for nature photos. According to a study done by the National Wildlife Federation, more people (about 63 percent) took nature photos from smartphones in 2017 than in 2016. This is the highest single-year increase since the study started in 2012. More people are realizing what a treasure nature truly is; and not only are they adding more and more nature photos to their Instagram feeds, but they're also posting with a bigger purpose. Research from the NWF found that more than half (54 percent) of nature photographers say that seeing wildlife makes them feel more connected to nature; and another 16 percent say it makes them want to protect the natural world. There are some species that are just easier to photograph than others, however, says Alan Korn, president and CEO of the NWF. "Birds are very approachable; they're very tolerant of people and they'll come right up to you and hover around," he says. "That's one of the most iconic, approachable species." So if you've got an iPhone that you're comfortable with, you could easily spot some wildlife by following these 10 tips. Make it easy. Take your time walking through the woods and make sure you're giving yourself time to get comfortable, even if you have to spend a few days. Wildlife adapts to being observed and photographed, so letting
