

“One of the unique aspects of FIFA is that people can play the game in so many different ways – it’s a football simulation so players can do what they want on the pitch,” said Peter Ettedgui, producer of FIFA. “FIFA 22 will take this to a whole new level. With HyperMotion Technology we’ll be able to offer an unprecedented level of authenticity.” The new demo is located within the game's Main Menu and shows off the core functions of the game engine, including animations, atmosphere, ball physics and match video recording. The demo allows players to experience gameplay with the new HyperMotion Technology and investigate the challenges, play styles and equipment of different national teams. The demo also features a new tutorial mode where users can choose a team, position and approach and play a training game. FIFA 21 is available in several languages. Challenges are not cumulative and earn no extra bonus items for players to earn. All items awarded are awarded at the completion of the challenge and cannot be traded for or otherwise transferred in-game. Prizes can only be claimed once per challenge, and all items, except tridents, have a limited time to be claimed.
