To learn more about the new features, read below. “HyperMotion Technology” This next-generation face and body detection technology, which first appeared on FIFA 18 in August last year, is used to add greater authenticity to motion in FIFA 18 and FIFA 22. When running this type of technology for FIFA 18, we recorded the players’ running and jumping actions as they were played in real-life situations and turned them into animations and goals. For FIFA 22, this technology has been further enhanced to create more realistic animations during player movements. With the “HyperMotion Technology,” the running animation has improved thanks to the data from the FIFA 18 and FIFA 19 test. By recording players’ movement in the field using motion-capture technology, we were able to unlock the true potential of the game and create more interactive and realistic movements. On top of this, by improving the running and jumping animations, we created a realistic jumping motion that is much closer to real-life reactions. The technology now allows for ball control and shooting, with genuine swerving and hitting motions. We’ve refined the animations so that the feeling of controlling a player from a very close distance - or even from the touchline - is much more authentic, and players will move and react more naturally on the pitch. FIFA 20 Special Features “Off-ball Skills” Off-ball skills are a new feature for FIFA 22, with a more realistic simulation of players performing tricks and turning on the ball. Various turns, spins, feints, dummies, jukes, and other off-ball movements have been added, and the moves are now more accurate and natural to the player. FIFA 22 will also allow players to display further reactions when off-ball moves happen, letting them show their skills off more realistically. To learn more about the new features, read below. The AI system works by analysing the movements of the players and directing them to their most likely opportunity or direction of attack. This will include the use of off-ball movement skills, such as the dribble and trick runs, and the player reacting to the ball, when possible. FIFA 20’s approach to these skills will be the same as FIFA 18. However, FIFA 22’s approach to off-ball skills will be developed using three distinct phases - friendly, competitive and special -
