The new Torenia was discovered in a controlled breeding program in March 2011 in a cultivated area of Santa Ana, Calif. The objective of the breeding program was to develop new Torenia cultivars with reblooming habit and pink flowers. The new Torenia was selected by the inventor as a single plant within the progeny of the stated cross of the seedling selection identified as code number 10-84-4-9-2-1-1-1 (not patented) made in April 2010. Asexual reproduction of the new Torenia by terminal stem cuttings since August 2011 in a greenhouse in Santa Ana, Calif. and Huasco, S.W. has demonstrated that the new Torenia reproduces true to type with all characteristics, as herein described, firmly fixed and retained through successive generations of such asexual propagation.Phytochemical analyses of Fringe populations in Australia. Fringe populations in Australia can provide an important genetic source for investigating gene flow and diversity. With special reference to phytochemicals as chemical defence traits, the phytochemical composition of a geographically diverse collection of Fringe populations collected from Tasmania, Victoria and New South Wales, Australia has been investigated. The content of 11 phytochemicals was analysed in leaves
