Renewable Hydrogen Boosts Costs of Power Production to $0.05/kWh October 26th, 2015 by Tina Casey Conventional power plants don't have an easy time competing with renewable power sources like wind and solar, but last month's glut of wind and solar power from windfarms across the United States helped drive down the cost of renewable hydrogen production to the point that it is now within reach of grid parity. REN21 in Switzerland's 2014 report on renewable energy trends confirmed that the price of renewable hydrogen is on the verge of grid parity. According to the Swiss government's estimate of the cost of renewable hydrogen fuel generation, just over $0.05 (€0.054) per kilowatt-hour is required. By contrast, with grid parity defined as a cost of $0.10 (€0.10) per kWh for onshore or offshore wind generation, hydroelectric or geothermal power plants, renewable hydrogen generates a pretty good rate of return
